SMART

THINKING!

Persistence Pays Off for MCC Graduate

Angelica Vega, 21, knows all about life's limitations, yet she never allowed them to hold her back from graduating summa cum laude from ASU. She shared her accomplishment with her daughter, Kaya Mae, who was only six weeks old when Vega began her education at Mesa Community College in 2004.

"Graduation was incredible," Vega said. "It was the reward I was waiting for. All that hard work paid off." Vega, who earned a bachelor's degree in social welfare and women's studies, plans to continue her education by entering law school at ASU in 2008 to work for international human rights.

While at MCC, Vega received several scholarships that enabled her to earn an associate degree and graduate from MCC with honors in 2005. Vega said although beginning college with a 6-week-old baby was difficult, the close-knit environment at MCC made it easy for her to focus on her goals and make the transition to the university.
